

independent clauses that are closely related and of equal or similar importance. For example:

He was feeling sick, so he went to the doctor.

Joe waited for the train, but the train was late.

What Is a Sentence?

A sentence is a complete set of words that conveys meaning. A sentence can communicate

- a statement (I am studying.)
- a command (Go away.)
- an exclamation (I'm so excited!)
- a question (What time is it?) https://docs.google.com/document/d/1tciPO8i6rv4p5jfYZrFw5vOFLMm71iJDgs_oOdNb6nW0/edit?usp=sharing

A sentence is composed of one or more clauses. A clause contains a subject and a verb. One clause can elaborate one idea at one time. It gives us a central piece of information, at times, along with some other bits of information. Sentences in the English language must begin with a capital letter and end with a full stop mark (.), question mark (?) or an exclamation mark (!), based on what kind of an idea it means to express

For example:

- 1. He is studying for the exam.
- 2. I am a student of GLA University.

Types of Sentences

According to their function, sentences are of four kinds – Assertive or Declarative, Interrogative, Imperative and Exclamatory.

DECLARATIVE SENTENCES

These are the most common type of sentences. They usually provide information, and are used to make statements. Here are some -

I can play the violin.

We hope to see you tomorrow.

I can play cricket.

She is studying English.

INTERROGATIVE SENTENCES:

These are used to ask questions. You form a question when you want to ask someone something, either to make a request, offer something, get information, or clarification.

It is a type of sentence that always has a question mark at the end.

Examples:

How did you do that?

Where did you go?

What are you doing?

Imperative Sentence

Imperative sentences are used to give some command, order, or instructions, or to make any request or plea. These types of sentences generally end with a full stop.

Examples:

Do your homework.

Close the door.

Call me tomorrow.

Exclamatory Sentences

An exclamatory sentence, also known as an exclamation sentence or an exclamative clause, is a statement that expresses strong emotion.

Typically, in English grammar, an exclamatory sentence ends with an exclamation mark—also called an exclamation point.

Examples:

You did a really good job!

Wow! I really cannot believe we did that!

My God! Those are some wonderfully great decorations.

Types of sentences according to the structure:

According to the structure of the sentence, sentences are of three types: Simple, Complex and Compound.

a. Simple sentence

A simple sentence has only one subject and one verb—one independent clause. In fact, an independent clause itself is a simple sentence. Here are some examples:

Emma is writing a letter.
I like chocolate ice cream.

b. Complex sentence

A complex sentence is made up of one independent clause (or main clause) and one or more dependent clauses (or subordinate clauses). The dependent clause is introduced and linked to the independent clause by a subordinating conjunction. For example:

Even though it was about to rain, I wanted to go for a walk.
I nearly missed my train because I couldn't find my ticket.

c.a Compound sentence

Compound sentences are formed by joining two
