

Assignment

SET-1 (for 1 to 45 class roll no.)

BCHO 0011: Food, Nutrition and hygiene

Total Marks: 40

Marks: 5

Q1. Proper development and growth of a child is depending on the essential nutrients in the prenatal stage. Illustrate essential nutrients, their functions, and how a mother gets those nutrients from food.

Q2. Care in the first 1000 days is essential for growth and development. Some key factors influence this growth and development. Outline the factors that affect a child's growth in the first 1000 days.

Q3. Diarrhea is the second leading cause of child mortality worldwide. Outline the symptoms of diarrhea, its effects on the human body, causes of spread, prevention and treatment.

Q4. Suppose you are the president of the community health committee in GLA University. You are going to discuss the importance of community health in India at a community meeting. Illustrate your opinion on the 'Importance of Community Health in India'.

Q5. Typhoid fever is a life-threatening infectious disease. Outline the causes and discuss the probable treatment by diet for Typhoid.

Marks: 3

Q1. Consider a women of height 5 feet 3 inches. Calculate and analyze the weight range the lady should have during her pregnancy for a normal healthy baby birth. [Given: 1 feet = 0.3048 meter and 1 feet =12 inches, recommended BMI (during pregnancy) =18 to 23]

Q2. There are usually three types of feeding processes depending on the age of a baby in the first 1000 days. They are exclusive breastfeeding, formula feeding and complementary feeding. Distinguish these concepts with the correct explanation.

Q3. Differentiate between-breast feeding and formula feeding.

Q4. Illustrate the symptoms of polio, its effects on the human body, causes of spread, prevention and treatment.

Q5. Define infectious disease and explain its transmission and prevention processes.

SET-2 (for 46 to last class roll no.)

Q1. There are several factors that affect community health. Illustrate factors that affect community health.

Q2. Suppose you are working as a field worker in an NGO. This NGO works in slum areas. In this situation, one day a family requested your advice for food during pregnancy (prenatal stage). Construct a typical diet chart for the woman and mention the additional energy requirements in the different trimesters.

Q3. Find the causes and discuss the probable treatment by diet for diabetes.

Q4. Hepatitis is a very dangerous disease in India. Outline the symptoms of hepatitis, its effects on the human body, causes of spread, prevention and treatment.

Q5. Suppose a lady of height of 5 feet 6 inch having weight of 41 kg. Analyze the scenario and report is this weight is appropriate or not and also discuss the significance of the result. [Given: 1 foot = 0.3048 meter and 1 foot = 12 inches, recommended BMI (during pregnancy) = 18 to 23]

Marks: 3

Q1. The first milk of a mother is called colostrum. Analyze the composition and functions of colostrum.

Q2. Immunity is the most important pillar of our health, and many factors affect our immunity. Explain the factors that affect human immunity.

Q3. Let us consider a mother who got ill just after her baby's birth. Doctors recommended the mother for formula feeding to her baby. In this situation evaluate the advantages and disadvantages of formula feeding for a baby.

Q4. After 6 months child should be feed by semisolid food. Prepared a simple diet chart for 6 to 7 months child.

Q5. Some specific foods can increase our immunity health. Explain the food sources and immunity health.